

St. Helena, Cal. Feb. 5, 1924.

Dr. L. C. Kellogg,
Loma Linda, Cal.

Dear Brother Kellogg:

I hold in my hand your letter of Jan. 20th asking if I can tell you what the attitude was of Mrs. E. G. White toward vaccination.

She regarded it as a perplexing question. I do not remember of her ever saying or writing that she had special instruction regarding vaccination. In my earlier days she spoke of it as something dangerous and related my own experience. She said that as a child I was perfectly healthy until I was vaccinated and by that my health was much impaired.

Mother listened attentively to the argument that the methods of vaccination had been improved, and when in our travels we were brought to a large city where smallpox was raging and the matter was discussed as to whether or no that I and my associates should be vaccinated, she offered no objection, and in view of the argument of physicians that it was not only for our own safety but for the safety of others, I and my associates were vaccinated.

Yours in haste,

W. G. White